

Gosnell: GUILTY

The jury found abortionist Kermit Gosnell guilty of three counts of first degree murder.

Sentencing will commence next week.

The implications of this verdict are tremendous. First of all, this is the first time an abortionist has been convicted of murder. This brings up the philosophical question of when does life begin, and when should the law provide protection for that life? Since Roe v. Wade, it has been after the baby was born and completely out of the womb. With this verdict, these questions are going to be challenged and need to be answered with more clarity than they have historically. This is a time when anyone who believes life begins at conception to be talking about this with your friends and coworkers. Frankly, the law needs to be updated to match what science can now tell us about the development of a person in the womb.

Be in prayer that this trial and conviction will have a positive impact on the pro-life movement.

[fblike style="standard" showfaces="false" verb="like" font="arial"]